

---

From: Conan Blanchard <conanblanchard@hotmail.com>
Sent: Sunday, February 01, 2015 3:38 PM
To: Way, Steven
Subject: Blacktail Creek Spill - 01FEB15

Steven,

Summary of today's operations:

3 truck loads of ice were filled today. Only 1 truck was available, the other would not start this morning. Loading was slow on the upstream area by initial oil recovery area. Excavator needed to drain water before loading truck otherwise water could freeze and potentially tip the truck over when it goes to unload ice. 33% of the upstream area (area from where they started to the rope mop skimmer) has been picked up.

According to Cory, they are reaching out for more trucks to be available tomorrow.

Trench ops remained the same - slower pumping. Will get total barrels at tomorrow's morning brief. Trench ops will continue overnight.

Eddie and myself assisted NDDOH with the samples at the southernmost trench pipe. We did not see them again after me and you had spoken, but will speak with Kris tomorrow about your thoughts on another trench cascaded towards the south.

Cory said the 3 sections of Enbridge boom will be returned tomorrow. Once they can access the boom they are using, they will have to decon it before returning it. Also, their 10" boom does have a 6" skirt.

Crews began breaking off/wrapping up the workday a little after 3 pm for the game, not to mention, it was bitter cold out there.

Call with any questions/concerns.

v/r,
Conan